QUALITY OF SERVICES AT THE HEALTH TRAINING CENTER OF THE MINISTRY OF THE REPUBLIC OF INDONESIA CILANDAK

This research is a qualitative research that aims to describe the Quality of Service Delivery of Cancer Health Training by the Ministry of Health Training Center of the Republic of Indonesia as well as to describe and analyze the inhibiting and supporting factors of facilitators in serving training participants at the Health Training Center. Health services are activities or a series of activities in the context of fulfilling service needs in accordance with statutory regulations for each facilitator and training participant and/or administrative services provided by health service providers. This study uses the theory of quality of health services according to Kotler in Fendy Tjibtono (2016: 284), namely Assurance (guarantee) Emphy (empathy) Reliability (reliability) Responsiveness (responsiveness) Tangible (physical appearance), Quantity timeliness, effectiveness, independence and commitment work, analysis of research data is descriptive. Perfect research results. In terms of realism indicators, it has not worked perfectly, such as the skills of officers in using supporting facilities in the service process. On the responsive indicator, all officers who carry out health training services are classified as responsive to training participants. Assurance indicators in health training centers are very much determined by the performance of health services. Tangible indicators in the form of the appearance of the apparatus when carrying out services, comfort right when the service takes place. The Empathy Indicator puts the interests of training participants first, serves in a friendly, courteous and courteous manner, officers do not discriminate and are able to respect training participants.
